4. What is Retaliation?

Retaliation refers to any negative or unfair action taken against a person because they raised a concern, asked a question, or participated in a compliance or investigation process.

This applies to everyone we work with—employees, agents, brokers, vendors, partners, customers, and directors.

Examples of Retaliation

A. Workplace Retaliation (Employees & Staff)

You may be experiencing retaliation if, after speaking up:

- You are dismissed, demoted, or unfairly disciplined
- Your salary, benefits, or responsibilities are reduced without justification
- You are threatened, intimidated, or harassed
- You are treated differently from others without valid reason.

B. Subtle or Indirect Retaliation (All Stakeholders)

Retaliation is not always obvious. It can include:

- Being excluded from meetings, decisions, or key communications
- Being deliberately ignored or isolated
- Not being given information needed to perform your role
- Being reassigned unfairly without clear justification

C. Business or Third-Party Retaliation (Agents, Brokers, Vendors, Partners)

Retaliation can also occur in business relationships:

- Unjustified termination of contracts or agency relationships

- Deliberate withholding of commissions or business opportunities
- Unfair or discriminatory treatment compared to others

5. What is Not Retaliation?

Not every negative action is retaliation. The following may be legitimate when properly justified:

- Performance management actions based on objective and documented evidence
- Disciplinary actions for actual misconduct or policy breaches
- Business decisions made for valid operational or commercial reasons, unrelated to any reported concern

6. Good Faith Reporting

This Policy protects individuals who raise concerns in good faith.

You are protected if you:

- Report honestly and sincerely
- Have a reasonable belief that the information provided is accurate
