

To the editor,

I just finished reading the comments of Paul Harvey in your op-ed article. I always admired Paul Harvey and after many years, I read his biography. Your article and his observations are spot on. I think our country is on a trip down a hill, a gradual slope at first, but it gets steeper the further along we go. Eventually, we pass the point where we have any say in what happens to our country or us as individuals. You will think I am a real nut case, but I am glad we have more guns per capita than any other nation on earth.

Retired police and military, hunters and gun nuts may be our only salvation. In Russia and Germany, private gun ownership was forbidden and when the revolution came, people had no means of resistance and were forced into a communist or Nazi-run country. In Hitler's Manifesto (or maybe it was Mein Kampf), he advocated getting guns out of the hands of people by any means possible. This is what is in store for this country if we allow it to happen.

Sincerely,

Bob Schultz
